HELLENIC INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY ORGANIZATION

Ancient Hellenic Inventions

This exhibition and the museum aim to demonstrate that the technology of the ancients, just before the end of the ancient world, was shockingly similar to the beginning of our modern technology.

For example, the bolts and nuts, gears and rules, pulleys and belts, sprockets and roller chains, pistons and cylinders, springs, hydraulic controllers and valves and programmers (all parts of the engine of a modern car) are just some of the inventions of the ancients which were the foundations of their complex technology. These legacies, identical and irreplaceable, continue today to constitute the building blocks of our modern technology, the development of which would be doubtful without its effortless and undemanding adoption.

The exploration of this age, when ownership for peak technology was not claimed, demonstrates without a doubt, how ancient Greeks have contributed to modern Technological Civilization.
